A note about Creative Movement: this is a technique Takami has used to help children discover body awareness and movement vocabulary. Students improvise movement using many suggestive images and cues, and create their own images that they then interpret through dance moves. This method emphasizes that we are all different and in very special ways. Students often work in small groups to give an opportunity to collaborate and share in their creativity and to watch and learn from others. Part of the classroom process encourages students to learn how to give and receive constructive, positive and respectful feedback, which builds confidence while helping kids improve -- a life-skill they will use in many other contexts.

The Creative Movement Showcase is an opportunity for students to perform their collaborative improvised creations on stage.
